My occupation requires that I spend a lot of time on airplanes. A natural and predictable part of any flight involves the flight attendant going over the safety features of the aircraft. Have you noticed that when that is taking place very few passengers are listening? When I speak I am counting on people paying attention; for that reason I really try to give my attention to the flight attendants, even though I know what they are going to say before they say it.

Anyhow, on a recent west coast flight I was sitting dutifully listening to those instructions for the umpteenth time when I gave particular thought to what they always say in reference to the oxygen masks. After explaining how and when the masks are to be used should they be deployed, they add, "Secure your own mask before helping others." For some reason I kept mulling that line over and over in my mind.

They are not saying you should forget about helping others; on the contrary, they want you to aid those around you, but they know you can be a greater help to others if you take care of yourself first. I thought about that. It reminded me that perhaps I could make a greater impact on others if I were more aware of "me" and the things I do as opposed to being so concerned about others, what they are doing and why are they doing things a certain way.

I was reminded of the numerous things people do that I don't understand, and instead of just minding my own business, I let their actions bother me. I let people who use their turn signals too late annoy me (I want to teach a class on how to use your turn signals properly!). Why would someone involved in a serious and embarrassing issue decide to go on TV and tell Dr. Phil and the whole world? See, I don't understand them! Why would someone go to a busy crowded coffee shop to study? Whatever happened to the library? Today I was in a coffee shop and a man using his bluetooth made all of us part of his conversation when we weren't interested. And why do guys at the gym have to work out in front of mirrors? Why don't people turn right on red, and why would someone watch Dancing With The Stars?

I know you aren't guilty of this, but I allow others' actions (although not illegal or immoral) to bother me. As I departed the plane on that flight where I was focused on that announcement, I was reminding myself, "Now, Walt, not everyone is like you; take care of yourself, mind your own business, and maybe, just maybe, in the process you'll be able to be of greater help to others."

The Apostle Paul said, "Let he who thinks he stands, take heed lest he fall." Or as Jesus put it, "Why do you look at the speck of sawdust in your brother's eye and pay no attention to the plank in your own eye?"
